

Building and Resource Consents

Building consents are contracted out to another local authority; however, we are responsible for processing resource consents.

We can also provide Land Information Memorandums in relation to individual properties.

Building consents

Building consents on the Chatham Islands are contracted out to Wellington City Council ; however, Environment Canterbury is the authority for large dams.

All building consent applications must be provided to the Chatham Islands Council, who will then forward these to Wellington City Council. The Chatham Islands Council provides administrative support.

Resource consents

Resource Management Act

The 1991 charges the Chatham Islands Council with the statutory function of processing and granting or declining resource consents, including certificates of compliance. The Council is responsible for regional, district and coastal functions.

There are five types of consents that Council must process:

land use, including the erection of buildings and land disturbance as well as the use of riverbeds and lakes

subdivision of land

coastal marine, including reclamation of the foreshore or seabed, the erection or demolition of structures and occupancy of the coastal marine area, including marine farming

water, including the taking, damming or diversion of water discharge of contaminants into the environment being water, land and air.
